THE ROMANCE OF A FREAK.

WONDERFUL event had taken place in Johnny Porter's life...

As he traveled the path that stretched between the front gate and piazza...

His misfortune doubly endeared him to his twin brother Will...

"Oh, sister," an excited voice called out as Rose Porter entered her home...

A faded little woman was washing vegetables in the kitchen.

"I'm so glad you're come, Rose," she said in a weary voice...

"Poor, lonely fellow," she would say to herself, "I shall be very good to him."

Then Will came home. He entered quietly. He wanted to surprise Johnny...

"Oh, my beautiful queen of roses," he was saying, "when will all this mountain of flesh be melted away..."

Will was pale-stricken—his poor Johnny had fallen in love with his promised bride...

"The poor fellow," she was saying; "I thought he understood that I was trying to make him like me for your sake..."

"Will! Rose!" he called. "engagement. I'll tell little mother and she'll tell father..."

It became a regular thing for Johnny to look for the friendly knockhole several times each day...

brothers by telling them stories—wonderful stories, Johnny thought them.

The Proctors' back yard was a pretty place. It was shaded by a big ash tree...

Two of the children had a dispute while up in the tree, and one fell out of it...

"You needn't apologize," Rose hastened to say, "I don't mind your looking over the fence a bit..."

Will had gone to Erba on a business trip, and how pleased he would be to know of Johnny's attempts...

"Poor, lonely fellow," she would say to herself, "I shall be very good to him."

Then Will came home. He entered quietly. He wanted to surprise Johnny...
